UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

DR. SEUSS ENTERPRISES, L.P.,

Plaintiff,

v.

COMICMIX LLC; GLENN HAUMAN;
DAVID JERROLD FRIEDMAN a/k/a
JDAVID GERROLD; and TY
TEMPLETON,

Defendants.

Case No.: 16cv2779-JLS (BGS)

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS

(ECF No. 8)

Presently before the Court is Defendant ComicMix LLC’s Motion to Dismiss (“MTD”), (ECF No. 8), Plaintiff Dr. Seuss Enterprises, L.P.’s Response in Opposition to the Motion to Dismiss (“Opp’n”), (ECF No. 22), and Defendant’s Reply in Support of the Motion to Dismiss (“Reply”), (ECF No. 32). Also before the Court are Defendant’s Request for Judicial Notice (“RJN”), (ECF No. 8-2), Plaintiff’s Response in Opposition to the Request for Judicial Notice (“RJN Opp’n”), (ECF No. 23), and Defendant’s Reply in Support of the Request for Judicial Notice (“RJN Reply”), (ECF No. 33). The Court previously vacated the hearing on the Motion to Dismiss and took the matters under submission without oral argument pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7.1(d). (ECF No. 35.) After

1 considering the Parties’ arguments and the law, the Court GRANTS IN PART and 2 DENIES IN PART Defendant’s Motion to Dismiss.

3 BACKGROUND

4 This lawsuit concerns two literary works, one of which is alleged to have infringed 5 the other. Plaintiff is the assignee and owner of various copyright registrations for and 6 alleged trademark rights in the works of the late Theodor S. Geisel, better known under his 7 pseudonym “Dr. Seuss.” (E.g., Compl. ¶¶ 1, 3, ECF No. 1.) One of Dr. Seuss’s best-known 8 books—and the one primarily at issue in this suit—is Oh, the Places You’ll Go! (“Go!”).

9 Defendants created a Kickstarter campaign in order to fund printing and distribution 10 of an allegedly infringing work, Oh, the Places You’ll Boldly Go! (“Boldly”). (See id. ¶ 34.)
11 Defendants all took part in the creation of Boldly. (Id. ¶¶ 2, 4–7, 19–22.) Boldly combines 12 aspects of various Dr. Seuss works with “certain characters, imagery, and other elements 13 from Star Trek, the well-known science fiction entertainment franchise created by Gene 14 Roddenberry.” (Id. ¶ 18.) Plaintiff alleges that Boldly “misappropriates key elements” of 15 Go! and four other Dr. Seuss books. (Id. ¶ 26.) Defendants contest this point, and prior to 16 the threat of litigation noted on their Kickstarter page that:

18 While we firmly believe that our parody, created with love and affection, fully 19 falls within the boundary of fair use, there may be some people who believe 20 that this might be in violation of their intellectual property rights. And we may 21 have to spend time and money proving it to people in black robes. And we 22 may even lose that.

23 (Id. ¶ 35.) Further, Boldly’s copyright page both states that “[t]his is a work of parody, and 24 is not associated with or endorsed by CBS Studios or Dr. Seuss Enterprises, L.P.[.]” and 25 includes the following text: “Copyright Disclaimer under section 107 of the Copyright Act 26 1976, allowance is made for ‘fair use’ for purposes such as criticism, comment, news 27 reporting, teaching, scholarship, education, research, and parody.” (RJN Ex. 5, ECF No.
28 15-1, at 2.)

1           Upon learning of Boldly and the corresponding Kickstarter campaign, Plaintiff sent 2 Defendants two letters over the span of approximately ten days asserting their exclusive 3 rights in the relevant Dr. Seuss works. (Id. ¶ 36, 38.) When Defendants did not respond to 4 the first letter, Plaintiff on the same day sent a takedown notice to Kickstarter and a second 5 letter to Plaintiff. (Id. ¶ 37, 39, 40). Kickstarter disabled access to Defendants’ campaign
6 later that day. (Id. ¶ 41.)

7           Several weeks later Plaintiff’s Counsel and Defendants’ Counsel exchanged letters; 8 Defendants argued their use of Dr. Seuss’s intellectual property was fair, threatened suit, 9 and advised Plaintiff that Defendants would send a counter-notice to Kickstarter to 10 reinstate the Boldly campaign. (Id. ¶¶ 42–44.) Plaintiff commenced this suit shortly 11 thereafter. (See generally id.)

12   LEGAL STANDARD

13           Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) permits a party to raise by motion the 14 defense that the complaint “fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted,” 15 generally referred to as a motion to dismiss. The Court evaluates whether a complaint states 16 a cognizable legal theory and sufficient facts in light of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17 8(a), which requires a “short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is 18 entitled to relief.” Although Rule 8 “does not require ‘detailed factual allegations,’ . . . it 19 [does] demand more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me 20 accusation.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v.
21 Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007)). In other words, “a plaintiff’s obligation to provide 22 the ‘grounds’ of his ‘entitle[ment] to relief’ requires more than labels and conclusions, and 23 a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.” Twombly, 550 U.S.
24 at 555 (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286 (1986)). A complaint will not suffice 25 “if it tenders ‘naked assertion[s]’ devoid of ‘further factual enhancement.’ ” Iqbal, 556 U.S.
26 at 677 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

27           In order to survive a motion to dismiss, “a complaint must contain sufficient factual 28 matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’ ” Id. (quoting

1 Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). A claim is facially plausible 2 when the facts pled “allow the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is 3 liable for the misconduct alleged.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 677 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 4 556). That is not to say that the claim must be probable, but there must be “more than a 5 sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully.” Id. Facts “‘merely consistent with’
6 a defendant’s liability” fall short of a plausible entitlement to relief. Id. (quoting Twombly, 7 550 U.S. at 557). Further, the Court need not accept as true “legal conclusions” contained 8 in the complaint. Id. This review requires context-specific analysis involving the Court’s 9 “judicial experience and common sense.” Id. at 678 (citation omitted). “[W]here the well-10 pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, 11 the complaint has alleged—but it has not ‘show[n]’—‘that the pleader is entitled to 12 relief.’ ” Id.

13 ANALYSIS

14 Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiff’s Complaint in its entirety, arguing that: (1) 15 Plaintiff’s copyright claims fail because Defendants’ work is shielded by the fair use 16 doctrine; and (2) Defendants’ use of Plaintiff’s alleged trademarks are shielded by (A) the 17 First Amendment, and (B) the doctrine of nominative fair use such that Plaintiff’s 18 trademark claims fail, thus also causing (C) Plaintiff’s unfair competition claims to fail.
19 (MTD 1–24.) The Court addresses each argument in turn.

20 I. Copyright Claims and Fair Use

21 Originally articulated in case law, and later codified by the Copyright Act of 1976, 22 the doctrine of “fair use” shields from infringement particular uses of a copyrighted work.
23 Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 576–77 (1994); 17 U.S.C. § 107. This 24 is because “courts have recognized that when a second author uses another’s protected 25 expression in a creative and inventive way, the result may be the advancement of learning 26 rather than the exploitation of the first writer.” Maxtone-Graham v. Burtchaell, 803 F.2d 27 1253, 1259 (2d Cir. 1986).

28 ///

1 “Fair use is a mixed question of law and fact,” and therefore is usually adjudicated 2 either at trial or on a motion for summary judgment where no material facts are in dispute.
3 Leadsinger, Inc. v. BMG Music Pub., 512 F.3d 522, 530 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Harper &
4 Row Publishers, Inc. v. Nation Enters., 471 U.S. 539, 560 (1985)). However, a fair use 5 defense may occasionally be resolved on a motion to dismiss when it is appropriately raised 6 and there are no material facts in dispute. Id. Nonetheless, “in light of a court’s narrow 7 inquiry at this stage and limited access to all potentially relevant and material facts needed 8 to undertake the analysis, courts rarely analyze fair use on a 12(b)(6) motion.” Browne v.
9 McCain, 611 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1078 (C.D. Cal. 2009) (citing Four Navy Seals v. Assoc.
10 Press, 413 F. Supp. 2d 1136, 1148 (S.D. Cal. 2005); Dr. Seuss Enters., L.P. v. Penguin
11 Books USA, Inc., 109 F.3d 1394, 1403 (9th Cir. 1997)).

12 In codifying the fair use doctrine, Congress set forth four non-exclusive factors for 13 courts to consider in evaluating whether a particular use of a copyrighted work is fair:

- 14 (1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a 15 commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes;
- 16 (2) the nature of the copyrighted work;
- 17 (3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the 18 copyrighted work as a whole; and
- 19 (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the 20 copyrighted work.

21 Campbell, 510 U.S. at 577; 17 U.S.C. § 107. “The fair use doctrine thus ‘permits [and 22 requires] courts to avoid rigid application of the copyright statute when, on occasion, it 23 would stifle the very creativity which that law is designed to foster.’ ” Campbell, 510 U.S.
24 at 577 (alteration in original) (quoting Stewart v. Abend, 495 U.S. 207, 236 (1990)).
25 Accordingly, “the analysis is a flexible one[,]” to be “perform[ed] on a case-by-case basis” 26 and “in light of the copyright law’s purpose ‘to promote the progress of science and art by 27 protecting artistic and scientific works while encouraging the development and evolution 28 of new works.’ ” Leadsinger, 512 F.3d at 529 (quoting Mattel, Inc. v. Walking Mountain Prods., 353 F.3d 792, 799–800 (9th Cir. 2003)).

1 As a threshold matter, Plaintiff argues that “while possible in rare instances to decide 2 fair use at the pleading stage, it is inappropriate here, where significant material facts are 3 necessary to make a determination of fair use.” (Opp’n 9.) However, the only genuine fact 4 Plaintiff points to is that “the issue of whether the Defendants’ use . . . will appreciably 5 harm the value of [Plaintiff’s] Works or . . . market simply cannot be made without 6 discovery and further development of the record on this issue.” (Id. at 15–16.) And 7 Defendants point out that Plaintiff’s sole allegation of market harm is that Defendants 8 “usurped DSE’s licensing opportunities.” (Reply 4 (citing Compl. ¶ 32).) Thus, as long as 9 the Court takes Plaintiff’s allegation of market harm as true, Defendants are otherwise 10 correct that “[t]he complaint, and documents sufficiently referenced therein or otherwise 11 subject to judicial notice, are sufficient to enable the Court to evaluate the issue of fair use.” 12 (MTD 6.) In particular, the Complaint itself raises the issue of fair use, (Compl. ¶ 35), and 13 the contents of the two primary books and other relevant works are before the Court and 14 not in reasonable dispute, (RJN Exs. 5, 6).<sup>1</sup> Accordingly, the Court concludes that fair use 15 analysis is appropriate on this Motion to Dismiss and addresses each factor in turn.

16 A. The Purpose and Character of the Use

17 “The central purpose of this [factor] is to see . . . whether the new work merely 18 ‘supersede[s] the objects’ of the original creation . . . or instead adds something new, with 19 a further purpose or different character, altering the first with new expression, meaning, or 20

21 <sup>1</sup> Plaintiff, despite explicitly referencing Go! and Boldly and attaching exemplars from both works in its 22 Complaint, argues that the Court may not consider the full versions of the two works that Defendants 23 attached to their Request for Judicial Notice. (RJN Opp’n 7–8.) But Plaintiff does not dispute the 24 authenticity of the two works. (See id.) And “in order to ‘[p]revent [] plaintiffs from surviving a Rule 25 12(b)(6) motion by deliberately omitting . . . documents upon which their claims are based,’ a court may 26 consider a writing referenced in a complaint but not explicitly incorporated therein if the complaint relies 27 on the document and its authenticity is unquestioned.” Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 763 (9th Cir.
28 2007) (alterations in original) (citing Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 706 (9th Cir. 1998)). Otherwise put, Defendants “cannot now seek to delay potential resolution of this action by asserting that this Court may not review the material it claims is infringing and has specifically identified in its Complaint.” City of Inglewood v. Teixeira, No. CV1501815MWFMRWX, 2015 WL 5025839, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 20, 2015). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff’s Request for Judicial Notice regarding Go! and Boldly and incorporates by reference the other Dr. Seuss works listed in paragraph 26 of the Complaint.

1 message; it asks, in other words, whether and to what extent the new work is 2 ‘transformative.’ ” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 579 (citations omitted) (alteration in original).
3 Because “the goal of copyright, to promote science and the arts, is generally furthered by 4 the creation of transformative works[,]” the “more transformative the new work, the less 5 will be the significance of other factors, like commercialism, that may weigh against a 6 finding of fair use.” Id. “[A]n allegedly infringing work is typically viewed as 7 transformative as long as new expressive content or message is apparent.” Seltzer v. Green 8 Day, Inc., 725 F.3d 1170, 1177 (9th Cir. 2013). “This is so even where . . . the allegedly 9 infringing work makes few physical changes to the original or fails to comment on the 10 original.” Id. (collecting cases). However, even when a new use is transformative, “the 11 degree to which the new user exploits the copyright for commercial gain—as opposed to 12 incidental use as part of a commercial enterprise”—affects the overall balance of this 13 factor. See id. at 1178 (quoting Elvis Presley Enters., Inc. v. Passport Video, 349 F.3d 622, 14 627 (9th Cir. 2003)).

15 In the present case, Defendants initially argue that Boldly classifies as a parody for 16 purposes of fair use analysis, and thus fits within the framework of the many cases 17 recognizing broad protection for such works. (MTD 10–16.) The Court disagrees.

18 “[W]hether a defendant’s work qualifies as a parody . . . [i]s one of law to be decided 19 by the court.” Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 801. “[T]he heart of any parodist’s claim to 20 quote from existing material . . . is the use of some elements of a prior author’s composition 21 to create a new one that, at least in part, comments on that author’s works.” Campbell, 510 22 U.S. at 580. Otherwise put, a “parody ‘may loosely target an original’ as long as the parody 23 ‘reasonably could be perceived as commenting on the original or criticizing it, to some 24 degree.’ ” Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 801 (quoting Campbell, 510 U.S. at 580–81).

25 In the present case, Defendants’ work is most appropriately termed a literary and 26 pictorial “mash-up.” See, e.g., Mash-up, Merriam-Webster, https://www.merriam-
27 webster.com/dictionary/mash-up (last visited May 3, 2017) (defining term as “something 28 created by combining elements from two or more sources: such as” underlying-work-

1 specific “characters or situations”). Such works may, of course, also be parodies when they 2 juxtapose the underlying works in such a way that it creates “comic effect or ridicule.”
3 Campbell, 510 U.S. at 580. However, there is no such juxtaposition here; Boldly merely 4 uses Go!’s illustration style and story format as a means of conveying particular adventures 5 and tropes from the Star Trek canon. And although Defendants argue generally that “Boldly 6 uses Dr. Seuss’s own works in service of a group-oriented counterpoint to the Go!
7 individualist ideal[,]” (MTD 16), the Court cannot conclude that such a “parodic character 8 may reasonably be perceived.” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 582.

9 But although Boldly fails to qualify as a parody it is no doubt transformative. In 10 particular, it combines into a completely unique work the two disparate worlds of Dr. Seuss 11 and Star Trek. Go! tells the tale of a young boy setting out on adventure and discovering 12 and confronting many strange beings and circumstances along his path. Boldly tells the tale 13 of the similarly strange beings and circumstances encountered during the voyages of the 14 Star Trek Enterprise, and it does so through Go!’s communicative style and method. Go!’s 15 rhyming lines and striking images, as well as other Dr. Seuss works, are often copied by 16 Boldly, but the copied elements are always interspersed with original writing and 17 illustrations that transform Go!’s pages into repurposed, Star-Trek–centric ones.

18 However, as previously mentioned, “[a]nother element of the first factor analysis is 19 whether the work’s ‘purpose’ was commercial or had a non-profit aim.” Walking 20 Mountain, 353 F.3d at 803 (citing Campbell, 510 U.S. at 584). And in the present case 21 there is no question that Defendants created their work for profit. Although this weighs 22 against Defendants in this factor, its weight is slight given both the transformative nature 23 of the work, see Campbell, 510 U.S. at 579 (“[T]he more transformative the new work, the 24 less will be the significance of other factors, like commercialism, that may weigh against 25 a finding of fair use.”), and the fact that Boldly does not supplant the market for Go! or the 26 other relevant Dr. Seuss works, infra Section I.D.

27 Given the foregoing, and on balance, this factor weighs in favor of finding 28 Defendants’ use to be fair.

1           B. The Nature of the Copyrighted Work

2           “‘This factor calls for recognition that some works are closer to the core of intended 3 copyright protection than others, with the consequence that fair use is more difficult to 4 establish when [fictional] works are copied.’” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 586. However, “‘this . . .
5 factor typically has not been terribly significant in the overall fair use balancing.’” Walking 6 Mountain, 353 F.3d at 803 (quoting Dr. Seuss, 109 F.3d at 1402). And although in the 7 present case this factor therefore weighs against Defendants, a Court must also “‘consider 8 the extent to which a work has been published.’” Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1178. That is, 9 “[p]ublished works are more likely to qualify as fair use because the first appearance of the 10 artist’s expression has already occurred.” Id. (quoting Kelly v. Arriba Soft Corp., 336 F.3d 11 811, 820 (9th Cir. 2003)). Because in the present case Dr. Seuss published Go! several 12 decades ago—and indeed “‘Dr. Seuss books have topped may bestseller lists, sold over 650 13 million copies worldwide, and been translated into more than a dozen languages[,]” 14 (Compl. ¶14)—“‘this factor as a whole . . . weighs only slightly in [Plaintiff’s] favor.’” 15 Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1178.

16           C. The Amount and Substantiality of the Portion Used

17           “‘The third factor looks to the quantitative amount and qualitative value of the 18 original work used in relation to the justification for that use.’” Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1178.
19 This is because “‘the extent of permissible copying varies with the purpose and character of 20 the use.’” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 586–87 (citing Sony Corp. of Am. v. Universal City Studios, 21 Inc., 464 U.S. 417, 449–50 (1984), and Harper & Row, 471 U.S. at 564).

22           In the present case, there is no dispute that Boldly copies many aspects of Go!’s and 23 other Dr. Seuss illustrations. However Boldly does not copy them in their entirety; each is 24 infused with new meaning and additional illustrations that reframe the Seuss images from 25 a unique Star-Trek viewpoint. Nor does Boldly copy more than is necessary to accomplish 26 its transformative purpose.

27           The final image comparison in Plaintiff’s Complaint is illustrative. (Compl. ¶ 28.)
28 Plaintiff’s work depicts two similar-looking, fanciful “Zax” creatures arguing in the middle

1 of a desert, with footprints to mark their arrival. Boldly takes the same desert landscape and 2 footprints, and in the fanciful creatures’ place puts two similar-looking beings of seemingly 3 Vulcan descent—one of which is drawn in the same position as his Dr. Seuss counterpart
4 and one of which is transformed from the Dr. Seuss creatures’ aggressive stance into a 5 contemplative pose—deep in the midst of playing some type of alien board game.<sup>2</sup> 6 Additionally, Boldly’s text reveals that the two Vulcan creatures are, in fact, the same 7 person, unlike Go!’s distinct “North-Going” and “South-Going” Zaxes. Boldly therefore 8 transforms the argumentative Zaxes and their corresponding depiction into a cloned Vulcan 9 matching wits with himself over an alien boardgame. One Vulcan is positioned almost 10 identically to his Zax counterpart to “conjure up” the Dr. Seuss work, while the other 11 Vulcan is drawn anew and a board-game added in order to fully accomplish the work’s 12 overall transformative purpose.

13 Given the foregoing, the Court concludes that this factor does not weigh against 14 Defendants. Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1178 (“[T]his factor will not weigh against an alleged 15 infringer, even when he copies the whole work, if he takes no more than is necessary for 16 his intended use.”).

17 D. The Effect of the Use Upon the Potential Market

18 This factor considers “not only the extent of market harm caused by the particular 19 actions of the alleged infringer, but also ‘whether unrestricted and widespread conduct of 20 the sort engaged in by the defendant . . . would result in a substantially adverse impact on 21 the potential market’ for the original.” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 590 (citing Melville B.
22 Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 13.05[A][4]). “Where the allegedly 23 infringing use does not substitute for the original and serves a ‘different market function,’ 24 such factor weighs in favor of fair use.” Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1179 (citing Campbell, 510 25 U.S. at 591). However, “[t]his factor also considers any impact on ‘traditional, reasonable, 26

27
28 <sup>2</sup> Boldly also adds similar-looking children playing in the background near a slide-like structure and a green, rather than Go!’s deep blue, sky.

1 or likely to be developed markets.’ ” Id. (quoting Ringgold v. Black Entm’t Television, Inc., 2 126 F.3d 70, 81 (2d Cir. 1997)).

3 In the current procedural posture Defendants are at a clear disadvantage under this 4 factor’s required analysis. Campbell, 510 U.S. at 590 (“Since fair use is an affirmative 5 defense, its proponent would have difficulty carrying the burden of demonstrating fair use 6 without favorable evidence about relevant markets.”). In particular, Plaintiff’s Complaint 7 alleges that “[i]t is not uncommon for DSE to license” its works, including in 8 “collaborations with other rights holders.” (Compl. ¶ 32.) And although Defendants might 9 well be able to ultimately disprove this statement as it applies works of Boldly’s type, there 10 is not currently any record evidence on this point. Plaintiff’s allegations are taken as true, 11 and therefore a potential harm to Plaintiff’s licensing opportunities is presumed.

12 However, this presumed harm is neutralized somewhat by the fact that Boldly does 13 not substitute for the original and serves a different market function than Go!. Kelly, 336 14 F.3d at 821 (“A transformative work is less likely to have an adverse impact on the market 15 of the original than a work that merely supersedes the copyrighted work.”). Indeed, 16 Boldly’s market relies on consumers who have already read and greatly appreciated Go!
17 and Dr. Seuss’s other works, and who simultaneously have a strong working knowledge of 18 the Star Trek series. It is therefore unlikely that Boldly would severely impact the market 19 for Dr. Seuss’s works.

20 Given the foregoing, and on balance, this factor therefore weighs in favor of 21 Plaintiff.

22 E. Additional Considerations and Conclusion

23 As previously noted, the factors above must be weighed “in light of the purposes of 24 copyright.” Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 800 (quoting Campbell, 510 U.S. at 578). In 25 order “[t]o promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts,” Article one, Section eight, 26 Clause eight of the United States Constitution empowers Congress to “secur[e] for limited 27 Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective” works. Effectively, 28 by ensuring that creators of artistic and scientific works are entitled to a period of

1 exclusivity where they may capitalize on their creative production, the various Copyright 2 Acts and predecessor statutes have attempted to fulfill that purpose.

3 But this period of exclusivity has always been balanced against the understanding 4 that “ ‘[i]n truth, in literature, in science and in art, there are, and can be, few, if any, things, 5 which in an abstract sense, are strictly new and original throughout. Every book in 6 literature, science and art, borrows, and must necessarily borrow, and use much which was 7 well known and used before.’ ” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 575 (quoting Emerson v. Davies, 8
8 F. Cas. 615, 619 (No. 4,436) (C.C.D. Mass. 1845) (Story, J.)). Accordingly, “[r]ecognizing 9 that science and art generally rely on works that came before them and rarely spring forth 10 in a vacuum, the Act limits the rights of a copyright owner regarding works that build upon, 11 reinterpret, and reconceive existing works.” Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 799.

12 This case presents an important question regarding the emerging “mash-up” culture 13 where artists combine two independent works in a new and unique way. See, e.g., Art Term, 14 Postmodernism, Tate, <http://www.tate.org.uk/art/art-terms/p/postmodernism> (last visited 15 Apr. 28, 2017) (“Often mixing different artistic and popular styles and media, 16 postmodernist art can also consciously and self-consciously borrow from or ironically 17 comment on a range of styles from the past.”). Applying the fair use factors in the manner 18 Plaintiff outlines would almost always preclude a finding of fair use under these 19 circumstances. However, if fair use was not viable in a case such as this, an entire body of 20 highly creative work would be effectively foreclosed. Of course that is not to say that all 21 mash-ups will or should succeed on a fair use defense; the level of creativity, variance from 22 the original source materials, resulting commentary, and intended market will necessarily 23 make evaluation particularized. In this regard, mash-ups are no different than the usual fair 24 use case. However, in this particular case the Court has before it a highly transformative 25 work that takes no more than necessary to accomplish its transformative purpose and will 26 not impinge on the original market for Plaintiff’s underlying work. And the Court is 27 especially mindful that “[i]t would be a dangerous undertaking for persons trained only to 28 the law to constitute themselves final judges of the worth of [a work], outside of the 1 narrowest and most obvious limits.” Campbell, 510 U.S. at 582 (alteration in original) 2 (quoting Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U.S. 239, 251 (1903)).

3 At the same time, “[d]epending on the particular facts, some factors may weigh more 4 heavily than others.” Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 800. As it stands in this case, factors 5 one and four—which “have ‘dominated the case law’ and are generally viewed as the most 6 important factors[,]” Seltzer, 725 F.3d at 1179—currently stand in equipoise. Factor two 7 weighs slightly in favor of Plaintiff, and factor three is neutral. And although it would 8 appear that the purposes of copyright favor Defendants, that determination is also a close 9 and unsettled call.

10 Ultimately, given the procedural posture of this motion and near-perfect balancing 11 of the factors, the Court DENIES Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss. Specifically, without 12 relevant evidence regarding factor four the Court concludes that Defendants’ fair use 13 defense currently fails as a matter of law.

14 II. Trademark and Corresponding Unfair Competition Claims

15 In addition to its copyright claims, Plaintiff asserts claims based on alleged 16 trademark rights under federal trademark and California unfair-competition law. (Compl.
17 ¶¶ 51–62.) Specifically, Plaintiff alleges trademark rights in (1) the title Oh, the Places 18 You’ll Go!; (2) “the stylized font” used in Dr. Seuss’s books; and (3) “the unique 19 illustration style of the characters and backgrounds” of Dr. Seuss’s books. (Id. ¶ 17.) 20 Plaintiff has produced no federal trademark registrations, (see id. ¶ 59 (“DSE is the 21 exclusive owner of common law trademark rights in the Dr. Seuss marks.”)), and therefore 22 alleges that each of the three items listed above “are distinctive and have acquired 23 secondary meaning” such that they serve as “indicators of source . . . and make . . . goods 24 immediately recognizable as deriving from Dr. Seuss.” (Id. ¶ 17.) And although Defendants 25 argue in part that Plaintiff does not or cannot own valid trademark rights in these three 26 items, (MTD 19–21), the Court need only address the issues of whether (A) the claims here 27 are inherently precluded by the First Amendment and (B) the doctrine of nominative fair 28 use bars Plaintiff’s claims regarding Go!’s title. The Court then briefly concludes this Part

1 by discussing (C) Plaintiff’s unfair competition claims, which rely entirely on Plaintiff’s 2 trademark allegations.

3 A. *The Scope of Trademark Rights Pursuant to Rogers v. Grimaldi

4 Defendants argue that Plaintiff’s trademark claims cannot survive First Amendment 5 scrutiny. (MTD 21–23.) This is because trademark rights, even when validly granted, are 6 not absolute; they at times must yield to the First Amendment. In order to analyze this 7 trademark and First Amendment intersection, the Ninth Circuit has “adopted the Second 8 Circuit’s approach from Rogers v. Grimaldi, which ‘requires courts to construe the Lanham 9 Act “to apply to artistic works only where the public interest in avoiding consumer 10 confusion outweighs the public interest in free expression.” ’ ” E.S.S. Entm’t 2000, Inc. v.
11 Rock Star Videos, Inc., 547 F.3d 1095, 1099 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Walking Mountain, 12 353 F.3d at 807 (emphasis in original), and Rogers v. Grimaldi, 875 F.2d 994, 999 (2d Cir.
13 1989)). Analysis is two pronged and disjunctive. Brown v. Elec. Arts, Inc., 724 F.3d 1235, 14 1242 (9th Cir. 2013); E.S.S. Entm’t, 547 F.3d at 1099. The baseline is that—for allegedly 15 infringing expressive works—“use of a trademark that otherwise would violate the Lanham 16 Act is not actionable . . . .” E.S.S. Entm’t, 547 F.3d at 1099. However, this baseline may be 17 refuted if either of two circumstances are established: ‘ “[(1)] the [use of the mark] has no 18 artistic relevance to the underlying work whatsoever, or, [(2)] if [the use of the mark] has 19 some artistic relevance, . . . [the use nonetheless] explicitly misleads as to the source or the 20 content of the work.’ ” Id. (second alteration in original) (quoting Mattel, Inc. v. MCA 21 Records, Inc., 296 F.3d 894, 902 (9th Cir. 2002), and Rogers, 875 F.2d at 999). The test 22 applies to trademark use both in the title and the body of the allegedly infringing work. Id.

23 As a threshold matter, Plaintiff argues that this entire framework is inapplicable in 24 the present case because Rogers itself dictates that First Amendment analysis “inherently 25 requires a determination of consumer confusion . . . .” (Opp’n 20.) But the Ninth Circuit 26 has previously directly rejected this contention. Brown, 724 F.3d at 1241–42 (explaining 27 that “our precedents dictate that we apply the Rogers test in § 43(a) cases involving 28 expressive works[.]” that “[w]e have previously rejected the ‘likelihood of confusion’ test

1 as ‘fail[ing] to account for the full weight of the public’s interest in free expression’ when 2 expressive works are involved” and that “[t]he only relevant legal framework for balancing 3 the public’s right to be free from consumer confusion . . . with . . . First Amendment rights 4 in the context of [a] § 43(a) claim is the Rogers test”). Accordingly, Plaintiff’s argument 5 on this front fails and the Ninth Circuit’s articulation of Rogers applies.

6       Regarding Rogers’s first prong, in the present case there is no question that 7 Defendants’ invocation of Plaintiff’s alleged trademarks is relevant to Boldly’s artistic 8 purpose. Boldly is designed as a mash-up of two creative worlds, and Go!’s title, font, and 9 Dr. Seuss’s illustration style must be employed to evoke Go! and the other Dr. Seuss works 10 here at issue. This is enough to place Boldly in the second prong of analysis. E.S.S. Entm’t, 11 547 F.3d at 1100 (“[T]he level of relevance merely must be above zero.”); Brown, 724 F.3d 12 at 1243 (same).

13       The only remaining question is therefore whether Boldly explicitly misleads as to its 14 source or content. The Court finds that it does not. Specifically, “[i]t is key here that the 15 creator must explicitly mislead consumers.” Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245 (emphasis in 16 original). This requires “an ‘explicit indication,’ ‘overt claim,’ or ‘explicit misstatement’ 17 that caused . . . consumer confusion . . . .” Id. (quoting Rogers, 875 F.2d at 1001). But in 18 the present case, Boldly—aside from changing the cover imagery and title to invoke Star
19 Trek characters and the famous, split-infinitive opening line, To Boldly Go: Star Trek &
20 the Split Infinitive, Merriam-Webster, https://www.merriam-webster.com/words-at- 21 play/to-boldly-split-infinitives (last visited May 2, 2017) (“ ‘[T]o boldly go’ is almost 22 invariably the first example that comes to mind whenever one is asked for an example of 23 a split infinitive . . . .”)—explicitly announces on its cover that it is authored not by Dr.
24 Seuss but instead “by David Gerrold & Ty Templeton.” (ECF No. 15, at 1.) And Boldly’s 25 copyright page even includes an explicit disclaimer that “[t]his is a work of parody, and is 26 not associated with or endorsed by CBS Studios or Dr. Seuss Enterprises, L.P.” (Id. at 2.)

27 ///

28 ///

1 These changes and disclosures, in the absence of any factual allegations to the contrary,<sup>3</sup>
 2 establish that Boldly does not explicitly mislead as to its source or content. Brown, 724 3 F.3d at 1245 (“[T]he slight risk that . . . use . . . might implicitly suggest endorsement or 4 sponsorship to some people is outweighed by the danger of restricting artistic expression, 5 and [in cases where there is no explicit misleading] the Lanham Act is not applicable.”
 6 (alterations in original)).

7 Plaintiff attempts to limit the First Amendment’s application to these facts by 8 offering several limiting principles, (Opp’n 19–22), but none are persuasive. Prior litigants 9 have asserted similar arguments, such as that aspects of the test as outlined above result in 10 “an inflexible and mechanical rule that more or less automatically protects expressive 11 works regardless of the deception involved.” Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245. However, our 12 Circuit has previously declined to alter this framework:

13 [A] balance need not be designed to find each of the sides weightier with equal 14 frequency. The language in Rogers is clear. “[T]hat balance will normally not 15 support application of the [Lanham] Act unless the [use of the trademark or 16 other identifying material] has no artistic relevance to the underlying work 17 whatsoever . . . .” 875 F.2d at 999 (emphasis added). The Rogers test is 18 applicable when First Amendment rights are at their height—when expressive 19 works are involved—so it is no surprise that the test puts such emphasis on 20 even the slightest artistic relevance. “Intellectual property rights aren’t free: 21 They’re imposed at the expense of future creators and of the public at large,” 22 White v. Samsung Elecs. Am., Inc., 989 F.2d 1512, 1516 (9th Cir. 1993)
 23 (Kozinski, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc), and the Rogers 24 test applies when this expense is most significant.

---

24 <sup>3</sup> Plaintiff asserts that because it alleges that Defendants’ conduct was “intentional and willful and is 25 calculated specifically to trade off the goodwill that DSE has developed in its Dr. Seuss Marks[,]” it 26 therefore must be taken as true that Defendants intended to explicitly mislead the public. (Opp’n 22.) But 27 a defendant may intend to or willfully use a mark without any desire to explicitly mislead consumers. And 28 the only other section of the Complaint with relevant allegations states that “Defendants deliberately wrote and illustrated [Boldly] with the intention of imitating the Seuss Marks, and in creating confusion in the minds of the relevant public as to the origin of [Boldly] and/or deceiving the public as to Dr. Seuss’s approval or licensing of [Boldly].” (Compl. ¶ 31.) However, this statement is “no more than [a] conclusion[] . . . not entitled to the assumption of truth.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679.

1 Id. (alterations in original). This Court both agrees with and is bound by this analysis.

2       However, Plaintiff notes that Rogers explicitly incorporates an exception for 3 “misleading titles that are confusingly similar to other titles.” Rogers, 875 F.2d at 999 n.5.
4 Although the Ninth Circuit has not directly addressed this exception, even as Rogers has 5 arguably expanded in reach over several rounds of Ninth Circuit interpretation, several 6 district courts have concluded that the exception is applicable. E.g., Kiedis v. Showtime
7 Networks, No. CV078185DSFMANX, 2008 WL 11173143, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 19, 2008)
8 (“But as the risk of consumer confusion is higher when ‘confusingly similar’ titles are 9 involved, the Court cannot hold, as a matter of law, that Defendants are entitled to the 10 across-the-board protection of the two-part test used in the [Rogers] case.”). And 11 Defendants here do not address this in their Reply. (See Reply 7–10.) Accordingly, the 12 Court will not on these grounds grant Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss regarding Plaintiff’s 13 alleged trademark in Go!’s title.

14       B. Nominative Fair Use

15       Defendants assert that nominative fair use shields Boldly’s use of Go!’s title. (MTD 16 23–24.) Plaintiff does not argue that the nominative fair use framework is inapplicable to 17 the works here at issue, but instead argues that analysis is premature on a motion to dismiss.
18 (Opp’n 22–24.) However, Courts in our Circuit have considered and dismissed causes of 19 action on nominative fair use grounds at the motion to dismiss stage. Beachbody, LLC v.
20 Universal Nutrients, LLC, No. CV 16-02015-R, 2016 WL 3912014 (C.D. Cal. July 18, 21 2016); see 1800 GET THIN, LLC v. Hiltzik, No. CV11-00505 ODW PJWX, 2011 WL 22 3206486, (C.D. Cal. July 25, 2011) (analyzing nominative fair use, determining “the three 23 requirements of the nominative fair use defense have been satisfied by Defendants[,]” and 24 noting that even “in the alternative . . . the Court still finds Plaintiff’s argument without 25 merit”). Indeed, it makes sense that where a “[p]laintiff does not allege sufficient facts to 26 defeat [a] [d]efendants’ nominative fair use defense,” a plaintiff’s “trademark infringement 27 claim [may be] dismissed.” Beachbody, LLC, 2016 WL 3912014, at *2; see Leadsinger, 28 Inc. v. BMG Music Pub., 512 F.3d 522, 530 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting in copyright context

1 that “fair use may be considered on a motion to dismiss, which requires the court to 2 consider all allegations to be true, in a manner substantially similar to consideration of the 3 same issue on a motion for summary judgment, when no material facts are in dispute”).
4 Accordingly, the Court here considers Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff’s 5 trademark claims on nominative fair use grounds.

6 The Ninth Circuit recognizes two distinct fair use defenses within the context of 7 trademark law—classic fair use and nominative fair use. Cairns v. Franklin Mint Co., 292
8 F.3d 1139, 1150 (9th Cir. 2002). Nominative fair use analysis is appropriate when a 9 “defendant has used [a] plaintiff’s mark ‘to describe the plaintiff’s product’ for the purpose 10 of, for example, comparison to the defendant’s product.” Id. (emphasis in original) (quoting 11 New Kids on the Block v. News Am. Pub., Inc., 971 F.2d 302, 308 (9th Cir. 1992)). “Such 12 nominative use of a mark—where the only word reasonably available to describe a 13 particular thing is pressed into service—lies outside the strictures of trademark law: 14 Because it does not implicate the source-identification function that is the purpose of 15 trademark, it does not constitute unfair competition; such use is fair because it does not 16 imply sponsorship or endorsement by the trademark holder.” New Kids on the Block, 971
17 F.2d at 308 (emphasis removed). “In cases where a nominative fair use defense is raised,” 18 a court must determine “whether (1) the product was ‘readily identifiable’ without use of 19 the mark; (2) defendant used more of the mark than necessary; or (3) defendant falsely 20 suggested he was sponsored or endorsed by the trademark holder.” Toyota Motor Sales, 21 U.S.A., Inc. v. Tabari, 610 F.3d 1171, 1175–76 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Playboy Enters., 22 Inc. v. Welles, 279 F.3d 796, 801 (9th Cir. 2002)). Once nominative fair use is sufficiently 23 raised, the defendant “bear[s] the burden of establishing that the . . . use of the . . . mark 24 was not nominative fair use.” Id. at 1182.

25 In the present case, Defendants offer a reasoned application of each prong of the 26 nominative fair use inquiry. (See MTD 23–24.) And Plaintiff’s sole argument against 27 nominative fair use is that it should not “appl[y] as a matter of law on a motion to dismiss.”
28 (Opp’n 23.) Accordingly, because the Court concludes that analysis on a motion to dismiss

1 is appropriate, and because Plaintiff does not oppose the substance of Defendants’
2 argument, the Court therefore GRANTS Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff’s 3 trademark cause of action.<sup>4</sup>

4 C. Unfair Competition

5 The Ninth Circuit “has consistently held that state common law claims of unfair 6 competition and actions pursuant to California Business and Professions Code § 17200 are 7 ‘substantially congruent’ to claims made under the Lanham Act.” Cleary v. News Corp., 8 30 F.3d 1255, 1262–63 (9th Cir. 1994). This means that if claims relying on the exact same 9 factual conduct are validly dismissed under the Lanham Act, they should also be dismissed 10 under California Unfair Competition law. E.S.S. Entm’t, 547 F.3d at 1101 (“[T]he First 11 Amendment[, Rogers] defense applies equally to ESS’s state law claims as to its Lanham 12 Act claim . . . .”); Playboy Enters., Inc. v. Welles, Inc., 78 F. Supp. 2d 1066, 1076 n.4 (S.D.
13 Cal. 1999) (fair use analysis is identical), aff’d in part, rev’d on other grounds in Playboy
14 Enters., Inc. v. Welles, 279 F.3d 796 (9th Cir. 2002). In the present case, the Court 15 concludes that Defendants’ nominative fair use defense precludes Plaintiff’s trademark 16 causes of action, (supra Sections II.A–B); accordingly, the same result inures regarding 17 Plaintiff’s unfair competition claims. (See Compl. ¶¶ 58–62 (alleging unfair competition
18 under California Business and Professions Code § 17200 with all supporting allegations 19 regarding trademark rights).)

20 ///

21 ///

22 _____

23
24 <sup>4</sup> The only other argument Plaintiff advances against nominative fair use is regarding the third factor, 25 which Plaintiff argues “requires an assessment of likelihood of confusion . . . .” (Opp’n 24.) The Court 26 disagrees. “In cases in which the defendant raises a nominative use defense, the above three-factor test 27 should be applied instead of the test for likelihood of confusion set forth in Sleekcraft.” Welles, 279 F.3d 28 at 801; Cairns, 292 F.3d 1139, 1151 (9th Cir. 2002) (“[N]ominative fair use analysis . . . replaces the likelihood of customer confusion analysis set forth in Sleekcraft.” (emphasis in original)). And the third factor does not analyze likelihood of confusion, but instead simply requires “that the user do ‘nothing that would, in conjunction with the mark, suggest sponsorship or endorsement by the trademark holder.’ ”
Welles, 279 F.3d at 803 (quoting New Kids, 971 F.2d at 308).

CONCLUSION

2 Given the foregoing, the Court cannot say as a matter of law that Defendants’ use of 3 Plaintiff’s copyrighted material was fair. The Court therefore DENIES Defendants’

4 Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff’s claim of copyright infringement. But Plaintiff’s trademark

5 and unfair competition claims stand on different footing. Plaintiff does not oppose the 6 substance of Defendants’ trademark-based argument regarding nominative fair use, and the

7 Court therefore GRANTS Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff’s claims of trademark

8 infringement and unfair competition. However, given Plaintiff’s lack of nominative-fair-

9 use opposition and Defendants’ failure to respond to Plaintiff’s confusingly-similar-titles

10 argument under Rogers v. Grimaldi, the Court grants Plaintiff LEAVE TO AMEND its 11 Complaint regarding the second and third causes of action. DeSoto v. Yellow Freight Sys.,

12 Inc., 957 F.2d 655, 658 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding that a Court should freely grant leave to 13 amend “unless the court determines that the allegation of other facts consistent with the 14 challenged pleading could not possibly cure the deficiency” (quoting Schriber Distrib. Co.

15 v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986))). Any such amendment

16 must be within fourteen days of the date on which this Order is electronically docketed.
